Why Buy Tenant & Liability Insurance?

Most tenants know that landlords have insurance on their buildings – walls, floors, doors, appliances. But tenants need to know that a landlord's insurance doesn't cover your personal belongings, such as furniture, if they're lost or damaged in a fire or by some kind of vandalism.

As well, tenants must pay for any damage they might accidentally cause to any part of a landlord's building. And tenants are financially responsible for any damage they may cause to the personal belongings of other tenants in those buildings.

For example, if your cooking accidentally starts a fire that spreads to other units or other parts of your building, you may be responsible for paying the costs of repairing all damage to the building (including other apartments) and also for replacing anything that's damaged in the other tenants' units. So, having tenant and liability insurance can bring tenants some peace of mind.
